

Dear Members of the Hong Kong Neuro-Oncology Society,

It is with great humility and enthusiasm that I begin my tenure as the new leader of HKNOS. As an oncologist working in the public sector, I, like all of you, dedicate my days to serving patients and navigating the increasing complexities of neuro-oncology. Today, more than ever, neuro-oncology relies heavily on multidisciplinary collaboration to achieve success. Whether it is the state-of-the-art neurosurgical techniques requiring the expertise of skilled surgeons, radiologists, and psychologists, or the ever-evolving paradigm of oncology treatments in this molecular era that demands close information exchange between oncologists and pathologists, we all share a common passion for advancing our field and a steadfast commitment to improving care for patients in Hong Kong and beyond.

As we move forward together, I envision HKNOS as a vibrant platform for collaboration and exchange. Our society brings together a diversity of expertise—neurosurgeons, oncologists, pathologists, radiologists, and other specialists—each contributing to the tapestry of knowledge in neuro-oncology. By fostering opportunities for connection and mutual learning, I believe we can inspire one another and drive innovation in both research and practice.

In the coming year, we will be organizing professional seminars featuring international experts, creating opportunities for members to engage in meaningful professional exchanges, engaging with patients and the public through thoughtfully organized activities and promoting research activities in the field of neuro-oncology. We hope these activities not only will facilitate our members' professional development but also deepen our connection to the communities we serve.

Lastly and importantly, I would like to express my heartfelt gratitude to our immediate past president, Prof. Aya Helali, as well as the office bearers and council members of the previous tenure. Their dedication and hard work have provided a strong foundation for our society, and the impactful events they organized have brought us to where we are today.

Thank you for your ongoing support and dedication to HKNOS and its mission. I look forward to working alongside all of you and meeting you at our upcoming events!

With warm regards,
Ken KM Cheung
